I listened idly and said, "No, I don't think she could have seen me;" forgetting be it observed, that the moonlight shone full on my face, and that the glare of the be it observed, that the moonlight shone full on my face, and that the glare of the gaslight streamed out of the room.

I attached no importance to the incident, though the reader will proably wonder at it. I felt nothing unusual, only perhaps a little s. dder and more uneasy; and the face of my dream-love looked sad too, when she came in my sleep, and paler, I thought, I than it was wont to look of old.

But no revelation came to me; and a month afterwards, when I returned to London, it would have required an effort of memory to recall the fact that at the Rockford ball a young lady arriving had "started as if she had seen a ghost," and fallen fainting into her father's arms. Had I then given up the search when the prize was so near? Had she seen me in dreams and recognized me, while no indication of her presence had been vouchsafed me?

The reader must form his own conclusions. My mad errand was over. I returned to town to do my father's bidding in any matrimonial speculation he might suggest, and to forget, as best I might, that I ever had a love in dreamland.
